HIGHLIGHTS FROM THE AIHW CHAIR

Apart from production of its Annual Report to Parliament, the Australian Institute of Health and Welfare (AIHW) has a legislative requirement under the Australian Institute of Health and Welfare Act 1987 to produce, every 2 years, two reports:

- ▶ a health report, providing statistics and related information concerning the health of the people of Australia and an outline of the development of health-related information and statistics by the AIHW (section 31(3))
- ▶ a welfare report, providing statistics and related information concerning the provision of welfare services to the Australian people and an outline of the development of welfare-related information and statistics by the AIHW (section 31(3A)).

The timing of production of the reports is prescribed in the legislation. Thus, during every second reporting year, the AIHW produces editions of both Australia's Health and Australia's Welfare—2001–02 was such a year.

The reports draw together the vast amount of information produced by the AIHW in the health and welfare sectors, as well as information from other organisations.

Both reports are considered by Ministers, administrators, academics and students, service providers, clients and interested citizens as definitive works in their field. I am personally aware of the use by my colleagues in the health sector of the Australia's Health reports, and of their widespread use in the university sector as a valued resource.

Media coverage of the launch of both publications was extensive. It was particularly pleasing that coverage of the reports was intelligent and informative, a tribute both to the reliability of the accuracy of their content, and the excellent work in producing and releasing the reports.

Australia's Welfare 2001

It was my privilege, for the first time as Chair of the AIHW Board, to participate in the launch by Senator Amanda Vanstone, Minister for Family and Community Services, of Australia's Welfare 2001 on 13 December 2001. It is the fifth biennial report on welfare services by the AIHW. The publication draws together national information and data in the fields of welfare services expenditure, housing assistance, children's services, aged care services and disability services. The 2001 report contained special chapters on de-institutionalisation and measurement frameworks for welfare services.

Australia's Health 2002

Australia's Health 2002 was launched by the Minister for Health and Ageing, the Hon. Kay Patterson, on 27 June 2002. That report provides a comprehensive picture of the health of Australians and the provision of health services. Australia's Health 2002 is the eighth biennial health report produced by the AIHW. The report provides a wealth of material to allow an informed view of the multitude of pressures acting on Australia's health system, and is a quality base for commentary and policy analysis.

Institute publications

Although production of both Australia's Health and Australia's Welfare within one reporting year represents a significant effort on the part of AIHW staff, they are by no means the only publications produced. During the reporting period, the AIHW produced 71 publications averaging 95 pages each.

The AIHW puts all its work in the public domain, and is committed to making it accessible to all Australians in a timely manner. Publications are available free of charge on the AIHW web site at www.aihw.gov.au, as well as being available for purchase through AusInfo shops or through the web site. To honour its commitment to meeting the needs of people with a disability, the AIHW makes specific arrangements with individuals who have difficulty accessing the published format.

Timeliness is a constant concern, as most AIHW data is provided by other bodies. I place on record the AIHW's appreciation of the efforts of large numbers of people across the health and welfare system who make AIHW publications possible, often against tight timeframes.

Australian Hospital Statistics 2000–01

Australian Hospital Statistics 2000–01 was released on 28 June, the day following the release of Australia's Health 2002 and within one year of the reference period. This achievement represents significant effort on the part of staff both from the Hospitals and Mental Health Services Unit as well as from the Data and Information Technology Unit and the Media and Publishing Unit. The cooperation of State and Territory health departments in providing the data promptly is also essential to timely production of this important report. The 2000–01 publication includes data on waiting times and key national performance indicators, transforming the report to a national report on Australia's hospitals, both public and private.

Unmet Disability Needs Study

The Institute's Disability Services Unit was contracted to undertake work within a stringent timeline to provide information for the new Commonwealth-State/Territory Disability Agreement commencing in July 2002.

The final report on the study of the effectiveness of the disability unmet needs funding and remaining shortfall was completed on time and submitted to the National Disability Administrators on 10 May, having begun in December 2001.

The report was released for publication by Disability Ministers on 28 June 2002. It is available, along with all other publications, on the AIHW web site.

Australian Centre for Asthma Monitoring

Asthma has recently loomed large on the national health agenda. Although mortality rates are falling, the prevalence of the disease has been increasing. It is the major reason for hospitalisation among children and imposes a substantial social and economic burden on the community. To increase its capacity to respond to the need for data and analysis in relation to asthma, the AIHW has recently established a new collaborating unit, the Australian Centre for Asthma Monitoring, at the Institute of Respiratory Medicine in Sydney. The Centre will collect and analyse data from a range of nation-wide sources, to give a comprehensive picture of the status of asthma in Australia.

The AIHW in context

In March 2002, I joined senior AIHW staff in updating our Corporate Plan.

After consultation with present and past Board members, I encouraged the AIHW to display fearless curiosity in its work; to use its skills to do the job well, but to have a demonstrable capacity to be critically aware, and to remember that reciprocity with our many partners is essential. The AIHW must have analytical integrity in everything it does. And it must understand its audience, so that it speaks to the right constituencies at the right time in the right way.

I am confident that the AIHW is performing well, and I am grateful to my fellow Board members, management and all staff and collaborators for their efforts to ensure that Australia has world-class health and welfare information.
